Selection of standards freely available in HTML

A number of standards in NEN Connect is freely available in HTML. This means you can see these standards online, on webpages.

Freely available standards in HTML has this icon.

If you would like receive any changes in a standard by the notification mail, you have to add it to your customised collection. Then you're also able to download the standard as a PDF file. In this case the standard counts on your credit of the number of available downloads within your license.

A few freely available standards aren't viewable in HTML, but are only provided as PDF file.

View standards in HTML

Click  HTML to open the standard. It opens in a new tab. The table of contents is on the left side. Click on a header in the table of contents to open the content.

Use the search icon on the right side to search within the content of the standard.

You'll see the number of search results in the icon. In the table of contents you'll see which chapters contains the search word. In the text the search word is marked yellow.

Removing freely available standards from your customised collection

Do you have freely available standards and other documents in your customised collection? You can remove these standards from your collection. This does not count on your credit of 10 % that you can replace every year. Note: if you delete a standard from your customised collection, you can not consult the pdf version. Also, you will not be notified by mail on changes in the standard.

You can find freely available standards and other documents in your customised collection by unchecking 'Freely available standards' and 'Freely available other' in the search filter. If the search result shows the icon for freely available, you know that this document is in your collection and is freely available.

Search using for instance standard number, document name or keyword...
